Our growing home

Sweden is more than just our home. Sweden is also growing. Sweden is developing. No matter where in the world they have their roots, the people who live in Sweden should feel that this is their home. The best measure of successful integration is that all of us who live here, feel that we belong here.

In the Sweden that we want to build together, new Swedes have the same rights and opportunities as everybody else. Healthcare, school and welfare should always be reliable. You should be able to live on your salary. No one should have to accept dangerous, degrading or hazardous work conditions.

When we trust each other, we are strong

When we trust each other, we are strong. By building a just Sweden, we also build trust in society and increase people's capacity to stand on their own two legs. This way, we combat parallel societies and criminal gangs, both at the bottom of society, and at the top.

Sweden is stronger, richer and happier when everybody participates. We reject the discourse about distrust between people, because it is based on injustices which we intend to combat. When you are treated justly, you also feel willing to contribute to the common good. This holds true for both new and old Swedes.

We want to build a Sweden where everybody is free to live as grand lives as their dreams and skills allow, without being held back by class, gender or orientation, skin color, inaccessibility or faith. We want to build a Sweden where everybody is free to contribute with the best they have.

Our home is a heritage

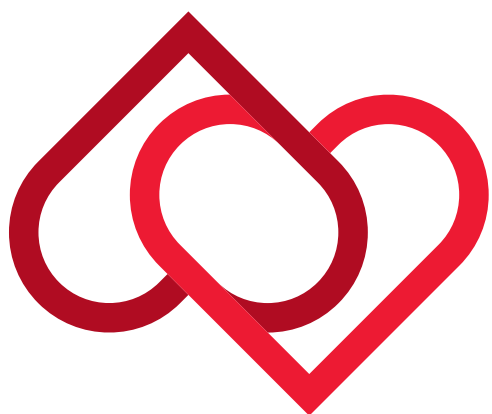

We have a lot to be proud for, not least of which our beautiful and rich nature, that our grandchildren will inherit after us. No longer will the environment be the bad conscience of the public debate. Instead of feelings of guilt we want to bring visions about a happier and healthier Sweden, where the economy works in service to the environment and we create a brighter future by keeping doing what we are already good at: Technical and social innovation. We don't have to choose between economy and environment.

Through green new-industrialization we will not just change into an environmentally friendly economy, we will also increase the resilience and standard of living of our society. Both food and energy can become cheaper, healthier and produced closer to the consumer. With fossil free traffic we decrease noise, get cleaner air and cheaper transports. We will create tools that take us from the dirty industrial economy into the sustainable knowledge based economy.

Wonderful days ahead

Nine years with the Alliance's budget led to increased economic and social gaps, and stagnation in every area whose challenges could not be solved by market economy. Environmental, educational and housing policies suffered especially.

The Social democrats haven't even governed for three years yet on our own budget, with a very challenging parliamentary situation. Yet, we see great progress. We are proud of how much the Social democrats have achieved. We have a lot left to give, if we get the chance for four more years!
